

Project: BUTterFLY

Design Team: architectScripta

Size: 1000 m²

Location: Athens, GREECE

Feature:

Project - The BUTterFLY Building is an eye-catching luxury apartment complex in Athens designed by Greek firm architectScripta. With its fluid, curving facades and distinctive pink and white exterior, the building stands out from its surroundings like a colorful abstract sculpture. Yet the unusual form is the result of a thoughtful design process involving 3D modeling, animation software and artificial intelligence.

As described by lead architect Nefeli Chatzimina, the design focuses on creating a dynamic relationship between interior and exterior. The building envelope features protrusions and recesses that frame unique views of the city and mountains beyond. At night, lines of lighting accentuate the geometry of the façade. Inside, the layout flows around alcoves and curves to give residents an immersive spatial experience. Sustainability was also a priority, with bioclimatic principles, recyclable materials and an A+ energy rating.

This small 9-unit building is just a taste of architectScripta's future visions for AI-powered design. It represents a new approach to using technology as a generative tool, not just for optimization but also for reimagining architectural forms and experiences.

Design Team - Athens-based architectScripta brings an experimental approach to design, leveraging new technologies like 3D modeling, animation and artificial intelligence. Founded by architect Nefeli Chatzimina, a graduate of Columbia University and the National Technical University of Athens, the firm is recognized for its visually striking projects. Signature elements include fluid curves, distinctive facades and a focus on the relationship between interior and exterior spaces. Sustainability is also integral, with bioclimatic principles and recyclable materials. Completed works range from private residences to large commercial projects, including the award-winning OTE Estate Call Center. With its progressive thinking and international experience, architectScripta is poised to push boundaries in reimagining architectural forms and transforming urban landscapes.
