Project - The striking Casa do Olhar in Goiânia, Brazil frames captivating views while creating a thermally comfortable oasis from the intense afternoon sun. Designed by Tati Tavares and Alex Dalcin for a social couple starting their family, the 574 sqm residence optimizes its corner plot to foster shared experiences. Strategic shading devices and operable screens allow abundant natural light without sacrificing views or overheating interiors.

Floating beams and slender columns create airy double-height interiors, minimizing visual barriers between the home's fluid spaces. The open-plan layout connects the living room, dining room and patio through the home's focal point – a framed view of the surrounding city. Upstairs, an intimate primary suite also enjoys panoramic outlooks from behind adjustable wood slats or full-height glass.

Passive solar strategies shape the home's form. Deep overhangs and vertical brise soleil screens cut harsh western sun along the perimeter, while central skylights pull daylight into core living areas. Lowered plaster ceilings conceal ductwork for centralized cooling that keeps interiors comfortable. Through simple but clever environmental solutions, the Casa do Olhar's contemporary form harmonizes with its context.

The home's strategic openings, clean lines and tranquil material palette create a serene setting suited to its picturesque locale. Flowing living spaces soaked in diffused light provide a soothing, inspiring backdrop for making memories.
