Project - Nestled in the Belarusian countryside, the striking Matski House by Minsk-based firm ZROBIM architects masterfully blends contemporary design with natural surroundings. Led by CEO and lead architect Andrey Makovsky, ZROBIM embraced traditional fachwerk construction techniques while envisioning a modern minimalist aesthetic.

Devoid of fences or barriers, the home features panoramic glazing across 65% of its façade to erase boundaries between interior and exterior. Inside, custom furnishings complement monochromatic hues and natural materials like exposed wood. An atrium with a living walnut tree at its core further integrates nature, allowing fluid movement through the open layout in harmony with seasonal cycles.

Makovsky leveraged the steep slope of the site to cantilever the house 4.5 meters over its edge, adding bold architectural drama. Further displays of innovative vision include converting a former landfill into two scenic ponds and plans for a productive green roof.

Sensitively sited and sustainably conceived, Matski House's daring form mirrors the adventurous spirit of its owners. The raw and unfinished interior spaces promote freedom - the ultimate luxury. Blurring indoors with out and artfully framing lush rural vistas, the home is a study in sculptural minimalism and respect for the land. ZROBIM has crafted a unique space where owners can live fully exposed to the wilderness, pushing creative boundaries as only truly pioneering architecture can.

Design Team - Guided by the motto "Architecture with an Idea," ZROBIM architects envision conceptual designs that uplift communities by transforming inhabitants' lifestyles. Since its 2011 founding, ZROBIM has implemented over 250 cutting-edge residential, commercial and civic projects while garnering global acclaim. But quantitative metrics alone cannot capture ZROBIM's impact - each custom space stems from a collaborative creative process aligned with clients' values. Sleek modular homes promote sustainable living; reimagined urban planning connects people with nature. From YouTube content creation to a fashion brand, ZROBIM's expanding ventures advance an integrated, human-centric vision of architecture expanding possibilities for better living.
